Head Of W. Berlin Jews And Of Central Council Blames Government For Neo-Nazis

Heinz Galinski, head of the Jewish community of West Berlin, criticized the West German Government for tolerating the re-emergence of Nazis and neo-Nazis groups. He called for a thorough investigation into the present activities of prominent Nazis and Rightist West German organizations "as a sign of the earnest intention on the part of the Federal Government to clear up the present unsavory situation."

Herr Galinski, who also is acting chief of the governing board in the Central Council of Jews in Germany, expressed the hope that West Germany's reaction to the Cologne desecration "may lead to an uprising of all people of good-will against certain abuses in the Federal Republic."

Official and public wrath descended on the German Reichs party, a splinter Rightist radical group accused of responsibility for the Christmas Eve desecration of a Cologne synagogue, says the New York Times. Official investigations were spurred by continuing popular anger at the deed, which most West Germans appear to feel undeservedly damaged their country's reputation.

The Federal Interior Ministry announced that it was reviewing its dossier on the party to determine whether sufficient evidence was at hand to charge it with subversive activity. A spokesman said available evidence against the party, which is supported by about one per cent of West German voters, had not been sufficient to justify recourse to the Federal Constitutional Court.

The Cologne synagogue and a memorial to victims of Nazism were defaced by a 25-year-old member of the German Reichs party. The police reported that he said he had been assisted by another young party member, who has denied the charge.

The Cologne police arrested several local party leaders. The Interior Ministry of North Rhine-Westphalia said it had been established that leading party figures knew beforehand of the planned anti-Semitic gesture.

A ministry spokesman said a special police detail had been set up to "get into the background of the affair." The party will not be allowed to divest itself of responsibility of disowning the two members accused of vandalism, the spokesman added. A party leader has also said one of the accused had Communist ties, says the New York Times. Meanwhile, demands for energetic action against Rightist radical groups were received by the Federal Government.

Willie Richter, chairman of the 6,000,000-member Trade Union Federation, sent a telegram to Chancellor Konrad Adenauer demanding a clean-up of extremist groups. The Cologne incident again showed the existence of well-organized groups "whose unteachable attitude is a condition for the revival of criminal Fascist ideas," Herr Richter said.

Similar demands were made by the Federation of Organizations of Democratic Resistance Fighters and Persecutees, by individual newspapers and by Socialist leaders. In an editorial typical of newspaper comment, the independent Frankfurter Allgemeine said of individual reactions to the incident: "Often a terrible embarrassment could be observed. This should not have been allowed to happen on German soil."

Chancellor Konrad Adenauer led West Germany in denouncing the Christmas morning desecration of the synagogue he helped to inaugurate three months ago, and of a near-by anti-Nazi memorial. From his Rhoendorf home, where he was reported recovering from a feverish cold, the Chancellor sent a message to Rabbi Zwi Asaria saying that "all decent Germans join me in condemning this atrocious deed."

Meanwhile, a formal warrant was issued by the State of North Rhine-Westphalia against two 25-year-old members of the German Reichs party, a Rightwing nationalist group that polled 1.02 per cent of the vote in the last national election, in 1957.

Josef Herman N. Dufhues, the state Interior Minister, said Ar-

Soviet Radio Atta... Judaism Follows Months Of Violent Action

A Soviet radio broadcast which attacked Judaism with the charge that it teaches that the Jewish people have been "chosen by God to rule the entire world", in the Ukrainian language, was transmitted on the Kirovograd Province regional service and was recorded in the West by both governmental and non-governmental monitors of Soviet radio broadcasts.

The broadcast was represented as an exposé of the contents of Sabbath services at the one synagogue in the city of Kirovograd, in the Central Ukraine, says the New York Times. It declared:

"Sermons and prayers proclaim the uniqueness of the Jewish people who are said to be chosen by God to rule the entire world. Here are, for instance, the words of the Torah — the bible or prayerbook — read by Rabbi Ayzak Spektor from the pulpit of Kirovograd synagogue: 'Know ye that the Lord God goeth in front of you like a consuming fire. He will destroy other peoples in front of you, and he will destroy them soon.'"

"Such a reactionary sermon shows that the Jewish faith has been strongly intermixed with the Jewish bourgeois nationalism and Zionism, already possessing a strong reactionary essence. This also shows that such sermons by Rabbi Ayzak Spector hardly differ from the woeful theory of the uniqueness of the Aryan race and its destiny to rule over the peoples of the entire world."

The Kirovograd radio broadcast charged that "Jewish ministers and circumcisers execute the rite of circumcision, which has a strikingly nationalistic character. Its specific significance lies in the fact that a child, proof of belonging to the 'chosen' people — the Jews," the broadcast added. "At the same time it imbues Jews with repugnance and hatred of those who do not possess this special sign."

The broadcast added this accusation: "Judaic sermons are sermons of bourgeois Zionists. Such sermons are tools of the nationalistic, Israeli, cosmopolitan, American bourgeoisie. With their tentacles, the Jewish bourgeois nationalists, with the help of Judaism, try to reach into our Soviet garden."

The broadcast, reports the New York Times, accused the leaders of the Jewish religious community in Kirovograd of praying "only to the Golden Calf: how to collect more money from believers for their own needs and to pray for the militant spirit of the Israeli militarists.

"Thus praying, they call for the killing of all those who deny the Pentateuch — the Jewish prayerbook," it continued. "As we know, during the Soviet rule many of the rabbis, ministers of the Jewish faith, have had an inimical attitude toward the Socialist system and have opposed the interests of the Soviet people for the benefit of internal counter-revolutions and international imperialism."

Soviet provincial newspapers and reports of travelers recently in the Soviet Union indicate that there has been a sharp increase in Soviet attacks against Judaism and religious Jews. Anti-Semitic violence was reported to have increased.

The most striking example of anti-Jewish material in the press was contained in Dnestrovskaya Pravda, published in Tiraspol, Moldavia. Three articles that occupied more than a page of this issue were devoted to attacks on Jews and Judaism.

The major article was presented over the names of three Jews who declared they had renounced Judaism. They called it a fraud and accused various religious Jews in that city of being thieves. An unsigned article in the same issue said synagogues in the United States served "the ruling circles of the U.S.A." and termed Judaism "the enemy of the revolution and of socialism."

A third article in the same issue asserted that a woman identified as Shendel Iosifovna Roitman, a Jewish name, had tried to bribe school officials to have her daughter enrolled in a teachers' institute. The paper also carries a cartoon showing Jews practicing deception by means of an alms box.

However, the newspaper refers at one point to Premier Khrushchev's mention of the role of Jews in Soviet rocket successes and at another point to many outstanding Jews in the world, says the New York Times. Material attacking religious Jews as thieves and picturing them as engaged in illegal activities is contained in the Ukrainian-language newspaper Kiivska Pravda and in the Smolensk newspaper Rabochi Put.

Synagogues have recently been reported closed in Tiraspol,

Zionist Leaders Call For Revival To Stem Losses

Zionist leaders warned of what they termed a "rising tide of assimilation" that is leading to a decline of Jewish cultural life in America. Ranking officials of the Zionist Organization of America made these assertions at a two-day meeting of the organization's national executive council at the Carnegie Endowment Building for International Peace, Forty-sixth Street and First Avenue, in New York.

In calling for a sharp revision of the Jewish educational system, says the New York Times, Abraham A. Redelheim, president of the Z. O. A., declared that while $60,000,000 a year was allocated on Jewish education, "half of the Jewish educational network consists of Sunday classes where children receive no more than one hour or one and a half hours' tuition a week."

He said that "statistics indicating increases in Hebrew school attendance belie the true state of Hebrew education in this country." Mr. Redelheim cited a survey on Jewish education completed by the American Association for Jewish Education. The survey, he added, while indicating a marked increase in Jewish school attendance, disclosed that the "holding power" of the schools was poor and that after Bar Mitzvah (confirmation), "the child is left to its own devices."

He pointed to the shortage of qualified Hebrew teachers, adding that the "high incidence of intermarriage coupled with the indifference to Judaism among Jewish students on the campuses call for re-evaluation of Jewish educational structure."

Speaking on the same theme, Max Bressler, of Chicago, associate chairman of the national executive council, called for the development of Jewish educational systems "for our young that will serve as an efficient instrument for the transmission of our Jewish heritage to succeeding generations."

Mr. Bressler and Dr. Joseph Tenenbaum, of New York, chairman of the organization's committee for Hebrew culture, appealed for the Zionist movement to take the lead in bringing about the "dynamic cultural revival of the Jewish community in the United States, linked with the revival of the Hebrew language and tradition."

In this connection, Jacques Torczyner, of New York, chairman of the organization's world Zionist affairs committee, urged Zionists to develop Jewish day schools and to strenghten teacher's institutions, says the New York Times. Mr. Torczyner declared that "larger budgets will have to be placed at the disposal of the education department of the World Zionist Organization and its various Zionist affiliates." Only then, he said, will the Zionist movement be able to play a constructive role in the future.

Dr. Emmanuel Neumann, member of the Jewish Agency Executive, called attention to proposed changes in the constitution of the World Zionist Organization that would permit the admission of non-Zionists for support of Israel.

Author, A Warsaw Ghetto Leader, Dies In N. Y. Haven

Bernard Goldstein, a leader of the Warsaw ghetto underground in World War II, died in New York, after surgery at Montefiore Hospital, the Bronx. He was 70 years old. A short time ago, another book of Mr. Goldstein's memoirs was published in Yiddish. In 1949, an English translation of his Yiddish work, "Five Years in the Warsaw Ghetto", was brought out under the title "The Stars Bear Witness."

Born in Shedltze, near the Polish capital, Mr. Goldstein was active from early youth in the Jewish Labor Bund, says the New York Times. This was the central organization of the Polish-Jewish socialist movement. When he was 13, he was struck on the chin by a saber swung in the breaking up of a banned meeting. He bore the scar all his life.

Mr. Goldstein was exiled to Russia during World War I. He escaped, took part in the 1917 uprising against the Czar and returned to Warsaw in 1919. He was a leading labor organizer with strongly anti-Communist opinions, to which was attributed an attempt on his life in 1929.

When Hitler rose to power in Germany, Mr. Goldstein was an organizer of the Bund militia. It resisted attacks by roving gangs of anti-Semites. According to his own account, his most trying days began when the Nazis overran Poland in 1939. But eventually, some of the Ghetto fighters were to survive the Nazi regime and its leader. Mr. Goldstein reached the U.S. in March, 1946, under sponsorship of the Jewish Labor Committee. He had been living at 625 Riverside Drive, New York.

Surviving are a son, Jan, in Tokyo; and two sisters, Mrs. Mildred Goldstein Kay and Miss Anna Goldstein, both of New York.

When joy reigns, reasonably confined, cocktails are probably in the offing. Or on trays. Or in eager hands.

Some of the merriest cocktails, you will find on close investigation, have been made with Bright's Sweet Vermouth (Manhattans) or Bright's Dry Vermouth (Martinis and Gibsons). There's no need to get involved in long speculation. The answer is crystal-clear. Bright's Vermouths are carefully blended and carefully aged wines made with 12 rare and expensive herbs imported from four continents.

The Star of David now shines over 16 lands

Recently, an El Al passenger summed up his feelings about the airline this way: "When I stood on the waiting ramp at the Amsterdam airport and saw that big beautiful Britannia with the Star of David on its tail come in for a landing, I was proud. Believe me, I was proud." People all over the world, in New York, Tel Aviv, London, Paris, Rome, Berlin, Brussels, Amsterdam, Zurich, Vienna, Athens, Istanbul, Nicosia, Uganda, Johannesburg and Teheran now look up and see the Star of David flashing across the skies. When El Al was first established in 1949, right after Independence, it was a tiny 3-stop airline. But as Israel's needs grew, El Al grew with them. Today, its giant jet-powered Britannias service sixteen nations on four continents. And besides carrying thousands upon thousands of passengers, El Al has become a major lifeline between Israel and the outside world.

Why They Stay In Israel

BY YEHUDA LEVINE

The last time I had seen Hanoch and Sharona Tel Oren was at Kibbutz Maale Ha-Hamisha in the Judean Hills, where they had been living and working. I had been especially interested in how two young ex-Americans — he had come from Pine Bluffs, Arkansas, and she from Cleveland — both flutists, graduates of the Juilliard School of Music, were faring in an agricultural settlement.

"How is Kibbutz life for a musician?" I had asked. I had expected an unusual answer — but not the one I received. "As a matter of fact, we're leaving the Kibbutz," Hanoch had replied, embarrassed. "We're moving out as soon as the Jewish Agency's 'Anglo-Saxon Section' can fix us up with housing in Jerusalem."

"Look, don't misunderstand," his wife had broken in, trying to explain. She was a slight, dark-eyed youngster wearing enormous horn-rimmed glasses that had made her look quite serious in a precocious sort of way. It had come as a surprise when she had said she was twenty-three, and the mother of a two-year old toddler in the Kibbutz nursery.

"It's really been a grand experience for us here at the Kibbutz," she had said with emotion. "We came to Israel as halutzim (pioneers), I want you to know. That was our dream — to live on the land and participate in the collective life. And after we arrived, that is what we did. We worked exactly as the comrades did — in the fields or chicken house or kitchen, wherever we were assigned. We asked for no favors, we didn't want them to do anything special for us just because we were musicians."

The enthusiasm suddenly went out of the young woman's voice. "But as the months went by, and day after day we returned to our room, dead tired, with neither time nor energy to think about music, let alone practice, we began to feel frustrated, lost." "We had to leave," Hanoch had said unhappily.

Many times during the past five years I had wondered about the Tel Orens. And now here I was, making my way down a wind-swept hill in the Bet Mazmil suburb of Jerusalem to see what had happened to these young Americans. I passed a Lambretta with tarpaulin-covered sidecar parked on the unpaved road in front of the house, which was one of a cluster of two-story concrete structures scattered at various levels along the hillside. It was a fairly typical "popular housing" development.

"That scooter yours?" I asked Hanoch as we were shaking hands. "Yes, we're rich now," he laughed. Sharona greeted us from the kitchen. "Behold!" she cried. "A two-room flat — and all to ourselves!" The rooms were small, the furniture well-worn. Music lay everywhere.

The Tel Orens hadn't altered much in these five years, not physically. Sharona no longer wore glasses, and she had plumped out a bit. Hanoch looked exactly the same as before. But they had changed, somehow. They seemed to smile a good deal more readily than I remembered. "Well, what's new? "Regga! Just a moment." Sharona fumbled around in the bookshelves and pulled out a photo album. "Here," she said, proudly displaying three snapshots. "Here's what's new! The little one is Nir, aged two; and this is Nadav, who is four — both boys. And here is Anva — you remeber Anva? She was almost a baby when you saw her in the Kibbutz. Now look at her!"

"Yes, quite a lady! Do you miss the Kibbutz?" I asked. "Been there recently?" "Of course! We're on perfectly good terms. We've many friends there. As a matter of fact, we especially like to perform in Kibbutzim. We've organized a quartet, you know, since you were here. Kibbutz audiences seem more alive, more receptive, somehow." "Provided you give them what they like," Hanoch added with a grin. "They'll walk out on you in the middle of a piece — some of them will — if it's too 'modern.'"

This led to a discussion of musical taste in Israel which, the Tel Orens maintain, is quite sophisticated; as an example they pointed to the experiences of their quartet, the Dalet Klei Shir (Four Instruments of Song), which has received enthusiastic receptions wherever they have performed. Their ensemble is an unusual one — two flutes, piano and 'cello; and the works they play, both classic and contemporary, are those seldom heard in the concert hall. "You might even call the quartet's performances halutzic. The fact is, we're doing a good deal of musical pioneering."

It developed that the Tel Orens had sent out a blanket invitation to Israeli composers to write works for their group, with assurance of public performance. As a result, four of Israel's best known composers (as well as the Swedish modernist Ingve Skold) have written chamber music specially for the Dalet Klei Shir. One of these compositions, "Quartet", by Shlomo Yaffe, won the Tenth Anniversary Committee Prize.

The Tel Oren's unorthodox approach to music, as well as their initiative, has won the plaudits of the Jerusalem Post's music critic. "They have brought some fresh air into the concert hall," he wrote, following the ensemble's last recital at Beit Hillel, "and their loving way of making music should earn them the appreciation of chamber music lovers." The quartet particularly enjoys playing at agricultural settlements. Merkaz Hatarbut, the central booking agency for the Kibbutzim (the one office, by the way, in which all the settlements, regardless of their ideological differences, cooperate) has engaged them to perform at many Kibbutzim, especially at festival time.

At Ramat Menashe, a small Kibbutz in the Hills of Ephraim, near Haifa, a strong bond developed between the haverim and the flute-playing Tel Orens, who were asked to participate in the Kibbutz Seder, always an important occasion in the settlements. The young Americans were delighted, and obliged by composing special songs and musical arrangements for the evening's festivities. Later that year when the Kibbutz decided to put on a dramatic performance to celebrate Israel's tenth anniversary, Hanoch was invited to write the incidental music. The play, "David Reuveni" by Bergelson (one of the Jewish writers liquidated in Russia) was directed by Israel Becker of the Habimah Theater. The Tel Orens, who are vegetarians, were surprised and overjoyed when they received twenty-one kilograms of Kibbutz-produced honey as a token of the settlement's gratitude.

Another new development in Hanoch's professional career since I last saw him five years ago, is his teaching at the Jerusalem Conservatory of Music. At present he has fifteen pupils studying the flute. "Those kids just eat it up!" he commented with enthusiasm. "And thank goodness Israel has no TV to make them placid listeners!"

The center of the Tel Orens' musical activities, however, now as then, is their work with the state-supported Kol Israel Radio Orchestra. Hanoch has in the meantime been promoted to the first-deck position, and Sharona is now a permanent member of the group (she had previously been only a part-time "extra.") The young couple, in fact, comprise the entire flute section of the orchestra; this, they admitted ruefully, doesn't leave much room for any other flutist wanting to settle in Jerusalem.

Financially, they are doing "very well." Recently the entire orchestra had won a raise, they said. Hanoch's monthly take-home pay is about IL 360, and Sharona's IL 318 — a combined income which, by Israeli standards, is quite good. However, in contrast to American practice, the musicians do not receive additional pay for any recordings, overtime, or extra jobs they may be called upon to do. Rehearsals keep them busy every morning until one, in preparation for the orchestra's weekly Tuesday night broadcasts.

Though there are many excellent individual players in the orchestra, the ensemble itself has been the subject of severe criticism for its lack of discipline and coordination. But the Tel Orens refused — out of a sense of loyalty — to discuss the shortcomings of the orchestra. Hanoch shrugged. "In Israel one just has to adjust to conditions." They talked about their cramped little flat — the mortgage on which they are paying off at the rate of IL 40 per month — and their hope of moving soon to a larger house. Despite the difficulties, living conditions were steadily improving, they said. All one needed was faith.

Sharonah spoke enthusiastically about her sister who had come to Israel in 1953 and was now living in a Negev Kibbutz. Members of Hanoch's family, too, have recently arrived in the country — his sister and brother-in-law, an engineer now teaching at the Technion, are living happily in Haifa. And then, to cap the Tel Orens' joy, Hanoch's parents came over for a visit — and also decided to stay. "How do they like it?" I asked. "Well, Father occasionally gripes at the red tape and the confusion," Hanoch laughed. "But he's getting adjusted!"

The Canadian Jewish Review is one of only 33 Audit Bureau of Circulations magazines in Canada. It gives wide, city-to-city coverage for your advertising message, and reaches a select consumer audience. The Canadian Jewish Review is received every Friday in the mail, and is read by the family groups which gather together for the Sabbath observance on Friday nights. Every issue is a guide to planning and purchasing, through each week. Items of interest to women, as well as to the family in general appear in every issue. It is a community record; it is informative about the trends in Jewish thought, and the important Jewish world news of the day. The Canadian Jewish Review reaches the able-to-buy homes, with high-ranking purchasing power, where quality and prestige of goods and services are of paramount importance.

ABC AUDITED PAID CIRCULATION

The Canadian Jewish Review is still the only Jewish publication in Canada printed in any language reaching the Jewish community. Such is not explained by a glimpse of my circulation card which had the distinction of being a member of the Audit Bureau of Circulations.

SOVIET RADIO ATTACK ON JUDAISM

Uzhgorod, Chelyabinsk, Rovno, Drogobych, Brest, Karaganda, Tashkent, and Samarkand. In the last two cities the closed synagogues were reported to be those of European Jews, while the synagogues of the Bukharan Jews, a Central Asian branch of Judaism, have apparently been permitted to function.

It was reported that in Konotop, in the Ukraine, authorities banned prayers in the synagogue on the eve of the Jewish New Year but relented and permitted prayers on the first day of the festival. On the second day those who tried to worship were reported to have been dispersed by the police.

In Kiev, on the eve of the New Year, all private prayer groups in homes were ordered disolved, it was reported, leaving only one small synagogue for the city, which is believed to have 200,000 Jews.

In Kharkov, where there has been no synagogue for several years, all private prayer groups were dispersed several months ago. On the eve of the New Year the authorities are reported to have confiscated the eight Torah Scrolls in the apartments where the prayer groups had met. Similar measures have been reported recently in Minsk and in the Moscow suburb of Kuntsevo.

Anti-Semitic violence and propaganda in recent weeks were reported to have been far more extensive than the single reported incident in the Moscow suburb of Malakhovka, where an attempt to burn down a synagogue took place several months ago, says the New York Times. It is now reported that the woman who died in that incident, Mme. Sarah Gordovskaya, did not die by accident, as first believed, but was strangled and her body thrown into the blaze.

Copies of the anti-Semitic leaflets posted in Malakhovka at that time have now reached the U.S. These show that they were signed with the initials of an organization calling itself "Kill the Jews and Save Russia." Circulars of similar content are reported to have been distributed in at least three Ukrainian cities, Kharkov, Kiev, and Vinnitsa, on the eve of the Jewish New Year. One of the leaflets that has reached the U.S. criticizes the Bolsheviks for having rushed to give the Jews equality.

It is reported that on the eve of the New Year windows in the Great Synagogue of Moscow were broken, and this was repeated several days later. On the holiday itself, in the town of Timiriazevski, hoodlums are said to have broken into an apartment being used for a prayer meeting and to have beaten the worshippers.

Windows in dozens of apartments occupied by Jews in the Moscow suburbs of Pushkino and Perlovka have been broken recently, it is reported; in some cases the apartments were entered and their contents destroyed, says the New York Times. In the suburb of Marina Roshcha stones were thrown into the synagogue during the celebration of the festival of the "Rejoicing of the Law."

The United Jewish Appeal Helps People To Rebuild Their Lives

BY WILLIAM ROSENWALD, OF NEW YORK, REPRESENTATIVE OF THE U.J.A.

Let me tell you concretely what I believe American Jews have done and are doing by giving solid support to the United Jewish Appeal. First, last, and foremost, they are supporting a philanthropic organization whose sole objective from its inception to this very day has been to provide competent Jewish organizations with the means to aid Jews overseas in need of our help. All of the money that the UJA raises is distributed among such charitable organizations and none of it is given anywhere else. The money of the UJA goes to four organizations:

First, it goes to the Jewish Agency for Israel, a philanthropic organization which has the responsibility for the transportation and absorption of newcomers in Israel. This is a vast job, involving housing, farm settlements, social services and other forms of aid to the refugees who have streamed in.

Second, it goes to the American Joint Distribution Committee, which has relief and rehabilitation programs in 25 countries outside of Israel. The JDC also conducts the Malben program in Israel in behalf of the sick, the aged, and the handicapped immigrants.

Third, UJA money goes to the New York Association for New Americans, which has the responsibility for Jewish refugees who come to America and who settle in the New York metropolitan area. And, in the last few years, some of the money from our UJA Special Fund has gone to the United Hias Service for the resettlement of Jews who fled from Hungary or who were expelled from Egypt. They were resettled in Australia, Canada, South America, the United States and elsewhere. To repeat, UJA funds go to: the Jewish Agency; J.D.C.; N.Y.A.N.A.; and United Hias Service, and that's all.

In brief, then, when one contributes to the UJA he does so with the understanding that his money will be used for humanitarian purposes — for rescuing lives, for providing the homeless with a home, for restoring health to the sick, for giving hope to the aged and the handicapped, for providing the untrained with vocational skills, and for giving fellow Jews in need the basic necessities of life.

There is another point I should like to discuss with you. It has been suggested that the mass influx of Jews into Israel creates a real fear on the part of the Arabs that Israel will have to expand beyond its present borders at the expense of her neighbors; and that this, in turn, threatens world peace, which, of course, is contrary to American policy. From this premise it is argued that the Jews of America should withhold their support from the UJA because the UJA is a party to this mass influx.

The obvious answer to the argument is two-fold: First, if the suggestion is that American Jews instruct Israel to close its doors to further immigration, this would be an outright invasion of Israel's sovereignty. It is Israel's right to open or close its doors, as it chooses. Our own opinion is that the people of Israel have been truly heroic in admitting about a million Jews during the time when they have been confronted with the problem of sheer survival. But, while we applaud this heroism, we have not interfered, nor shall we ever interfere, with Israel's exclusive right as a sovereign and independent state to determine its own immigration policy.

Secondly, it is obvious that the UJA is not responsible for any mass influx into Israel. What has been responsible for the mass influx into Israel is the inner urge on the part of Jews, living in fear, under degrading disabilities, in an atmosphere charged with danger to their physical security, or under conditions which make it impossible for them to live as Jews. They turn to Israel as their only hope for a life of freedom and dignity.

Nothing in the world that anyone, including the UJA, would have done could have contained the Jews of Yemen, of Iraq, of Tripolitania, and of North Africa in those countries. In view of the perilous condition under which those Jews lived, they could no more have been persuaded to remain in those countries than can Jews who live in security in Western lands be persuaded to uproot themselves and go to Israel in large numbers. The Jews who went from those countries to Israel did go because they wanted to go or had to go. The only difference we, through the UJA, have made to these people, and it has been a tremendous difference, is that by our help we gave them a decent chance to rebuild their lives in their new home.

What I have said of the Jews of Yemen, Iraq, of Tripolitania, and of North Africa is likewise true of the Jews of Egypt, Hungary, Poland, and Rumania. These Jews decided for themselves that they wanted to flee or to rejoin their families.

We are proud of what we did to rescue them. Our goal was and still is to give these people a chance to build new and decent lives in new and decent homes. The UJA never created crises nor exaggerated the emergencies, and every year we described the situations as they truly existed. We should have been remiss had we done otherwise. For Israel to have barred its doors to these people and for the United Jewish Appeal to have withheld its help in transporting these Jews to Israel would have violated every decent instinct that we possess.

I know that I speak for most of the Jews of America, and certainly for most of the Jews and non-Jews who support the UJA, when I say that they wish with all their hearts that Jews in search of a home could have a free choice as to where they might go. The fact is that in the rare instances when Jewish refugees are given a choice and are able to go to countries other than Israel, there are some who avail themselves of this opportunity and the UJA enthusiastically supports their migration to such countries. This happened in the case of tens of thousands of Jewish DPs who came to the United States, Canada, and Australia, and more recently, and up to the present date, in the case of Jews who fled from Hungary in 1956 and the Jews who were expelled from Egypt in 1957.

But, until now, Israel has been the only haven to which Jews can go in large numbers. In fact it stands unique as the only haven in the world for large numbers of refugees. This is underscored by the regrettably negligible progress that the world has made in the solution of the total world refugee problem, highlighted by the World Refugee Year. I am sure that we shall continue to help Jewish refugees whenever and from wherever they may come, in spite of any one's fear that the support of these refugees conflicts with our loyalty to the great country in which we live.

We who support the UJA have assumed a responsibility of gigantic dimensions. Generous as we are, we do not raise sufficient funds to meet the urgent needs with which we are confronted. Apart from the needs of the Jews in the 25 other countries who receive our help, in Israel alone our task has been of such dimensions that the government of Israel itself has been called upon every year during the past decade to pour millions and millions of pounds obtained from Israel's own heavily taxed people into helping to absorb the newcomers.

But, despite these efforts, the objectives have not been achieved. This very day there are still some 400,000 Jews in Israel who are not yet absorbed in the life of the country. All of them still need some form of help, such as housing, gainful employment in their professions and trades, tools to become self-supporting and a myriad of social services. The needs of the unabsorbed in Israel is the most urgent problem facing the UJA today. Moreover, we must meet the costs of current migration and of our world-wide commitments to other Jews in need.

I know that we and the rest of the Jews of America will not remain silently acquiescent. We cannot remain silent when needy Jews call for our help. We dare not rest while Jews anywhere in the world suffer. In helping these people we shall continue to live up to our finest traditions as Jews, and as Americans.

HEAD OF W. BERLIN JEWS

nold Struenk, a baker's assistant had confessed to smearing the synagogue walls with swastikas and with slogans proclaiming: "Germans demand that Jews get out." Josef Schoenen, an office employee, was held with Struenk. The slogans and swastikas were washed off the synagogue. The police also cleaned the base of the memorial, where black paint had been smeared over the lines, "This memorial recalls Germany's most shameful period."

The memorial, which is about a mile from the synagogue, consists of a statue of a mother and child says the New York Times. Beside it is a stone plaque reading: "Here Rest Seven Victims of the Gestapo." These lines were untouched. From both official and unofficial reaction it was clear that none of the anti-Semitic incidents in West Germany during the last few years had shocked the nation so deeply. The fact that it happened on Christmas seemed to sharpen the pain.

One Jew in Berlin reported receiving a telephone call from a man who sounded as if he was crying. The man asked that the whole nation not be judged by the acts of a few criminals.

A statement issued by the directorate of the Central Council of Jews in Germany said: "It is ominous in 1959 to be able to evoke pictures that bring to mind the November days of 1938."

This was a reference to the two-day pogrom initiated by the Nazis in revenge for the murder of a German diplomat in Paris by a young Jew. The hours of fury became known as "Crystal Night" because of the glass of synagogues and Jewish-owned homes and shops that littered the streets after the burning and pillaging.

From Hanover, Wilhelm Meinberg, federal chairman of the German Reichs party, announced that Schoenen and Struenk had been expelled for violating the party's principles and that the Cologne district branch had been dissolved because of anti-Semitic tendencies.

There were some suggestions that a better solution would be for the Government to dissolve the whole party. It has had one notable political success but several failures in recent years. It achieved the minimum 5 per cent of the vote in the Rhineland Palatinate election last April and got one seat in the state Parliament as a result.

However, the party lost all six seats in the Lower Saxony Parliament, and failed to elect anyone to the Bremen Parliament and holds no seats in the Federal Parliament. Its program is much the same for all elections. It wants all foreign troops out of Germany; the country reunified, and neutral between the United States and the Soviet Union; the end of discrimination against former members of the Elite Guard and the release of Germans still imprisoned for war crimes.

Party leaders deny that they are the ideological successors of the Nazis. But talking with the New York Times reporter after the Rhineland Palatinate success, Adolf von Tadden, the party's propaganda chief, said he could well understand the "unfriendly feelings" toward the comparatively few Jews now living in Germany. "Many Germans think Jews have got a preferred place" because of restitutions made to them, he said.

An 18-year-old student, Klaus Rath, was credited with providing the police with the major lead in the search that led to Struenk and Schoenen. City and state officials had offered rewards of the equivalent of nearly $4,000. Church and political leaders joined Chancellor Adenauer in expressing distress over the incident. President Heinrich Luebke said that the German people, "on whose name criminals have already once heaped shame and dishonor," wanted to live "in peace and mutual respect" with all peoples.

Some months ago Chancellor Konrad Adenauer informed a major American Jewish organization that West Germany was waging an "uncompromising battle against anti-Semitism in courts, press, radio, and private associations. In his special message to the American Jewish Committee, Dr. Adenauer said that the German people "are fully aware of human rights of liberty promulgated in the German Constitution."

He then made sharp reference to the Hitler period, declaring that "recent dictatorship on German soil gave an awful lesson in experience as to what befalls a people, disregarding these rights." The message was adressed to the agency's board, holding its annual meeting in Washington, D.C.

Dr. Adenauer emphasized several months ago that all efforts of his government "for the reconstruction of Germany and the re-establishment of friendly relations with the free nations would be endangered unless democracy is firmly anchored in the conscience of German citizens."

He said "anti-Semitic, anti-democratic phenomena" had come to the surface in Germany, but he said they should not be over-estimated, says the New York Times. Before the Hitler period, Germany had a Jewish population of 450,000. About 25,000 live there now.

Dr. Adenauer's message had followed a meeting in Bonn with Irving M. Engel, honorary president of the American Jewish Committee. The 53-year-old Committee is devoted to combating bigotry and discrimination and the furthering of intergroup relations. Addressing the dinner session of the agency, Mr. Engel termed the Hitler period "Germany's undigested past, which, if not faced and dealt with, could represent a grave danger to the future of Germany's democracy."

Mr. Engel, a New York lawyer, stressed that a major area of concern was "education of German youth for citizenship." At that time he asserted that Chancellor Adenauer's government "already has done a great deal to compensate victims of Nazism for their material losses." But he stressed that more must be done "to demonstrate to the uncommitted peoples of the world the impact of democracy."

He reported that West Germany's educational system had made some progress in teaching political science, civics, and citizenship in the schools and labor unions and through adult education.

Professions of regret and apology continued to flood in on Rabbi Zwi Asaria, of the Cologne synagogue, and on other leaders of the Jewish community in West Germany. Dr. Ernst Schwering, Mayor of Cologne, paid a personal call on the rabbi shortly before leaving on a scheduled fourteen-day goodwill visit to Israel. The Mayor is one of fifty-three prominent West Germans who went on the trip.

Dr. Schwering said he would assure the Israelis that Germans deplored the vandalism "because it defames us, not the Jews." Wilhelm Johnen, president of the North Rhine-Westphalia Landtag (parliament), also offered Rabbi Asaria his apologies in person. He said the Landtag would look into the political aspects of the incident.

The Cologne Jewish community issued a statement thanking those who had expressed their sorrow. "So many have indicated their sympathy that we cannot answer them all," it said.
